THE VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

One of the most important public bodies in our history was the Virginia Convention, assembled to pass upon the Federal Constitution. Madison and Patrick Henry led the contending parties. The debates were full of interest. The intellect of the age was turned into the channel of politics. The brilliant parliamentarians in which Fox, Burke and Pitt played their parts had not yet closed in England. The vicissitudes of the French revolution gave impressive interest to questions of popular right and of the limitation of government to all classes in the country. Our own experiment in government was a matter of anxiety; and the contest between the partisans of conservatism and the theorists of the extreme State rights school ended in the triumph of the latter, with the amendment that followed. The debates are of higher tone and broader scope than the discussions of the same subjects in the present day. Fewer questions divided the solitude of the public. Literature was devoted, in pamphlet and essay, to the illustration of the pursuit of the most cultivated minds, and opened the paths to distinction. We have another Virginia Convention today. Hannibal with a score of blacks are delegates! Ruffians of the coarsest grain! Men who propose to govern the once proud Old Dominion by terrorism! The proscription of white citizens, the confiscation of white men's property—the torch and the knife—these are characteristics and sayings of 1867-8. No such degradation could fall upon any State, unless the way had been prepared by demagogues outside, and by armed force. Shall we stand by and help while this black terror falls upon the South darkening it and covering as with a funeral pall its liberty and its life? Shall we not rather help to let in the light and dissipate this black and brutal rule?—Albany Argus.

KISSING—INTERESTING ANECDOTES.—When the Cardinal John of Lorraine was presented to the Duchess of Savoy, she gave him her hand to kiss, greatly to the indignation of the irate churchman. "How madam," exclaimed he, "am I to be treated in this manner? I kiss the queen my mistress, and shall I not kiss you, who are only a dutchess?" and without more ado he, despite the resistance of the proud little Portuguese princess, kissed her thrice on the mouth, before he released her with an exultant laugh. The doughty cardinal was, apparently of one mind with Sheldon, who thought "to kiss ladies' hands after they, as some do, is like little boys who, after they eat the apple, fall to the paring." When Charles II. was making his triumphal progress through England, certain country ladies who were presented to him, instead of kissing the royal hands, in their simplicity held up their pretty lips to be kissed by the king—a blunder no one would more willingly excuse than the red-haired lover of Henry. Nell Gwynn. Another poet, the countryman of Chatter, had two centuries later the honor of being publicly kissed in the stage box by the young and lovely Countess of Villars; but in Voltaire's case the lady gave the country salute not of her own free will, but in obedience to the commands of the amorous in the pit, mad with enthusiasm for the poet's "Merope."

Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, as our readers will remember, gave Steel, the butcher, a kiss, for his vote, nearly a century since, and another equally beautiful woman, Jane, Duchess of Gordon, recruited her regiment in a similar manner. Duncan Mackenzie, a veteran of Waterloo, died at Elgin, Scotland, December, 1866. He delighted in relating how he kissed the Duchess in taking the shilling from between her teeth to be come one of her regiment—the Gordon Highlanders, better known as the 92d. The old Scottish veteran of eighty-seven has not left one behind him to tell the same tale about kissing the blue-eyed Duchess in the market-place of Duthill. The late Daniel O'Connell hit upon a novel mode of securing votes for the candidates he had named at a certain election, which test, considering the constitutional temperament of his countrymen, is said to have proved effectual. He said, in reference to the unfortunate elector who should vote against them, "Let no man speak to him. Let no woman salute him!" Gilbert Stuart, the portrait painter, is said to have once met a lady in the streets of Boston, who accosted him with, "Ah! Mr. Stuart, I have just seen your likeness, and kissed it because it was so much like you." "And did it kiss you in return?" "Why, no." "Then said the gallant painter, "it was not like me."—Galaxy.

ABOUT WIVES.—Some writer propounds the following "posers," which we commend to the thoughtful consideration of all concerned:

Has she a call to be a wife, who thinks more of her silk dress than her children, and visits her nursery no oftener than once a day?
Has the woman a call to be a wife, who sits reading the latest novel while husband stands before the glass vainly trying to pin together a buttonless shirt bosom?
Has that woman a call to be a wife, who cries for a cashmere shawl when her husband's notes are protested?
Has she a call to be a wife, who takes a journey for pleasure, leaving her husband to toil in a close office, and "have an eye" when at home, to the servants?
